

Abstract

1D or 2D flat-bed electrophoresis or flat-bed chromatography can be used to determine unseparated and separated substances directly, and without any prior labelling, if their inherent fluorescence in the UV range which is excited by irradiation with UV light in the wavelength range 140 to 320 nm is measured using a UV detector.